Attempt Made To Damage Marti Dairy; Shots Make Crowd Flee

Late Tuesday evening 13 automobiles containing about 30 men drove into the farm yard at the Marti Dairy north of Mokena on the Wolf Road and started to break milk bottles at the milk house. The men started hurling milk bottles at an electric light on a high pole in the farm yard but failed to hit it. Ervin Marti, owner of the dairy opened fire on the gang, firing six shots at them. When the shooting started the trouble makers fell over each other in their hurry to reach their cars and hastily left the farm driving thru Mokena and then eastward.

Mr. Marti did not know the men and does not know whether they were milk strikers or union drivers.

Mr. Marti has been making his regular milk deliveries in Mokena and Orland Park during the strike. He does not ship any milk to the Chicago market.

Quite a number of milk bottles had been smashed before Mr. Marti opened fire on the strangers. It appears that their aim was to wreck the milk house and bottling plant.

It is not known whether anyone was hit by the bullets fired.

Frankfort Endeavor Club Hold Live Wire Meeting

The Frankfort M. E. Endeavor Club met at the social rooms of the church on the evening of January 8th, for their regular monthly meeting. Some 40 men were in attendance. The regular business session was followed by an interesting program which consisted of Duets played and sung by the Sweeney boys, Solo by Reuben Schellhase, Male Quartette by Messrs. Wesley Hollstein, Reuben Schellhase, Lawrence Woodman and Urban Schellhase. Dr. Landis Brannon of Manhattan, Ill., gave the principal address. His topic being, "What Has Medical Science Done for Humanity, and what is it Doing To-day." The remainder of the evening was spent in playing games. The refreshments committee, Messrs. Fred Hasenjaeger Jr., Henry Heisner and George Brandau served an Oyster Stew.

Three new members were received into the club; Attorney W. Hirschbach, George Bettenhausen and Alfred Heisner. The Club now has 39 members. A Chop Suey supper will be sponsored by the Club in the near future.

Dairy Truck Seized by Strikers

Very little disturbance was reported in this section during the milk strike. Friday a truck of the Joliet Dairy Co., loaded with bottled milk was stopped by a large force of the dairy strikers at 159th street and all the milk was dumped out and bottles were broken. The Joliet Dairy Co., estimated the damage at about $500.

Delivery of Milk Is Resumed Again

Soon as the news was received on Wednesday noon that the milk strike was ended, the dairymen in this section got ready to ship milk to Chicago. Some of the cream was shipped in by train. The dairy men had the sympathy and support of the public in their fight to obtain a fair price for their product. The dairy man who has a heavy investment and who puts in long hours of hard work has always been underpaid, while the distributors and drivers have been getting more than fair wages and prices and the public has been made to foot the bill.

The farmer who is the back bone of the nation has been out in the cold long enough and it is time that he is getting a break in his favor.

Homewood Milk Truck Damaged At Tinley Park

The only flareup Tinley Park experienced during the milk strike was Tuesday evening when a milk truck from Homewood driven by a Mr. Tweitmeyer was attacked by the strikers in front of the Freberg pasteurizing plant in Tinley Park. The milk was dumped and the truck was damaged. Mr. Tweitmeyer was not molested.

Will County took especial interest in grand opera Monday night when a native daughter, Miss Lucille Govey of Joliet, made her debut with the Chicago Grand Opera Company in the role of "Mimi" in "La Boheme". About 1,000 admirers of this brilliant young lady came by special train and autos to the Chicago Grand Opera house to see and hear Miss Govey who made a great hit and was called and recalled again and again after each act. She was presented with four huge bouquets of flowers by her Joliet friends.

Among the members of the Joliet Lucille Govey committee was Dr. W. V. Hedges of Frankfort.

The local press was represented at Miss Govey's debut by Editor, Wm. Semmler and family, Don C. Hall, Jr. and family. Mrs. Semmler's nephew, Robert Oestreich, and wife of Joliet.

Tinley Junior Garden Club

By Arnetta Mancke

The regular meeting was held on Thursday, Jan. 4, 1934 in Mrs. Wm. Funk's basement. Although the Christmas season was almost to the end, never the less we were very much reminded of it by two lovely ever-green trees with Christmas lights and decorations. One was covered entirely with blue lights and a bright star at the top.

After the usual welcome and greetings to our guest, Mrs. J. Klepper, president of the senior club, Fern Fulton served as Jr. president. Both president and vice-president were absent.

During the meeting a message was read from Mrs. Bagby brought to us by Patty.

Mrs. Rogers was in charge of the study period.

Mrs. Wm. Funk expressed her New Year's greeting and then presented Fern Fulton with a pretty red bell for best attendance. Shirely Anderson will also receive one.

Jennie Miknis received a beautiful dish garden for the most interested garden bud. Jenni always has her lesson page and other valuable news too.

Mrs. Funk assisted by Fern had the buds read lovely poems about Christmas, New Year and the month of January. Then Marguerite Lorenz served as chairman of the games, after which prizes were awarded. The tree lights were turned on and the buds were lead to the table covered by comic papers with a lovely little tree in the center. Here the buds were served cocoa and peanut butter crackers by Velma Lorenz and Marion Andres. Marion passed candy made by Mrs. Funk. This was made of sorghum brought from Springfield and when the buds were ready to leave, Velma Lorenz played Santa Claus and handed each one a gift of candy.

We also had reports that Jeanette Freberg, Lorraine LaLonde and Loretta Keuch were ill. We hope these buds will be well again soon.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR
To each and every one;
May all your hopes be gratified.
Before the year is done.

TO THE BLUE (NRA) EAGLE
Dear Eagle, emblem of our Land
A toast we'd drink to you—
But O—(pray let us understand)
Why do you look so blue?

"No more the spaces of the sky
Are mine to roam at will;
No more lightnings I defy
Till winds and storms lie still.

"I miss the bracing, vibrant air
Which my free wings once knew;
Now from a cage, strait, dark and bare,
A narrow world I view.

"No more the clouds I gaily cleave
And soar o'er sea and land;
My nations meekly I receive Doled by a master's hand."

O, Eagle! emblem of our Land,
A toast we drain to you—
May all the wide world understand,
Just why you look so blue;

May those who love you quickly rise
And burst your bars in twain,
That you may cleave the boundless skies
In Freedom's pride again!

Swiss Government Seeks Heirs of Former Mokenaite

Postmistress Daisy Lynk of Mokena received a letter the forepart of this week from the postal department saying that the Swiss government was seeking to locate members of the family of Jernias Wirsch who had located in Mokena in 1885.

The Swiss government is seeking the members of the party in question in order to settle an estate in Switzerland to which the members of this family apparently are heirs.

The older residents of Mokena recall a party by the name of Jerry Wirsch who at one time conducted a meat market in the old Ducker building which formerly stood on Front street. This building was destroyed by fire many years ago.

Members of the Wirsch family are now residing in Chicago and occasionally come out to Mokena to visit relatives.

Wolt Rd. Injunction Suit Still Pending

The injunction suit in connection with the Wolf road right of way fight has not come up for a hearing as yet. The courts are busy with a large number of grand jury cases at this time. Mr. Krusemark filed a petition some time ago with Judge Wilson of the Will County Circuit Court asking that the temporary injunction granted by Judge Wilson to the school directors of the Cleveland school district, be dissolved for want of equity in the case by the complainants.

APPLAUSE

By R. H. WILKINSON

©, 1933, Bell Syndicate.—WNU Service.

WHEN Frank Storey graduated from Maplewood high school and entered Brewster college, he had but one purpose in mind: Football.

Scholastic standing meant nothing. Culture meant nothing. Fraternities meant nothing. Coeds meant nothing. He had but a single vision: To pick up the ball on Brewster's five-yard line and race 95 yards to the opposing goal line, with the roar and applause of 50,000 spectators in his ears. He wanted this more than anything. The roaring applause of the crowds.

Because of these things Frank had a lot to learn.

First, he discovered that he couldn't even play on the football team unless he was up in his studies.

Second, he wouldn't even be considered for the varsity until his second year.

Third, he had a lot of competition—there were some 300 huskies out to make the team, and only about 60 to be chosen.

Fourth, he had to possess unusual strength, skill and ability in order to receive the plaudits of the crowds.

It wasn't like back in Maplewood. There he had been a star. The star. There were only 15 players on the whole team. And during a game, the stands cheered him every time he picked up the ball. The cheers were music to his ears. His inspiration.

But because Frank had his heart set on becoming a big football man, he aimed to overcome the obstacles that stood in his way.

And he succeeded remarkably well. His scholastic standing was low, but it made him eligible for the team.

He spent a long, weary year waiting for his sophomore term to roll around, and then went out to make the team.

The very energy and eagerness he displayed, coupled with a fundamental knowledge of the game, won him a place on the subs.

Frank was proud and reasonably happy, but by no means content.

The first year he wasn't allowed to play in a single game. There were others much better, much more skilled.

He spent hour after hour warming a bench while the great crowds cheered his teammates on to victory.

The second year Coach Prince gave him a chance early in the season.

He was sent out to substitute for a regular in one of the minor games. Brewster was well in the lead when Frank joined the line-up, and he knew that Coach Prince was giving the substitutes a chance to get into a real game, with not much to lose if they blundered.

But Frank didn't care.

He saw the great crowds, felt the old thrill and determined to make the best of his opportunity.

The quarterback gave Frank the ball on the very first play.

He sprinted with it around left end and made a three-yard gain before being tossed. Well satisfied with himself Frank stood up, unconsciously listening for the cheers of the crowd.

But the crowd was silent.

This, to them, wasn't anything to get excited about.

Indeed some of them were already leaving the stands.

Frank felt sick.

He wasn't used to this. He was used to hearing hundreds of spectators bellow his name after such a play.

Here thousands were silent. It unnerved him.

The next play went to him and he fumbled. The opposition recovered, and for the first time in his life Frank heard himself being razed by an ungracious crowd.

Two more plays and the game ended. Frank walked from the field sick at heart, utterly dejected, low in spirits.

Back in his room he flung himself on his bed and cried. He knew that Coach Prince wouldn't give him another chance that season.

During the winter that followed and the next summer Frank Storey struggled to overcome the thing that had lost him his great opportunity.

Without a thought of giving up, more determined than ever to attain the goal he had aimed at when first coming to college, Frank reported for early training and when the squad trotted out on the field for the first game of the season—his last season—Frank was with them.

He tried not to listen for the acclaim of the crowds.

He tried to sit through the game without having a desire to rush up to Coach Prince and plead for a chance to show what he could do.

The season progressed with Brewster piling up victory after victory.

It began to look as if they were going to wind up the season without a single defeat.

And it began to look as if Frank Storey was going to wind up his college football without being given another opportunity to play.

Frank tried to grin and bear it. And yet he knew that if the season ended without his chance being offered, he'd never finish the college term.

He'd quit, and go to digging ditches somewhere.

Brewster had reached the end of its schedule and was playing its final game, the big game, with Pencost, its greatest rival.

Frank was still on the substitute list. He was moody and morose as he sat there with the other subs, watching the varsity go into action.

And yet, secretly, he wanted Brewster to win. Couldn't help wanting her to win.

But from the start it began to look as if Pencost was going to smash Brewster's record.

They managed to roll up six points in the first quarter and another six in the second.

Both attempts to kick the goal failed. The third period netted neither team a tally, but the Brewster outfit was looking rather sick.

Man after man had either limped or been carried from the field. It looked as if Pencost was out for vengeance.

It was about the middle of the last quarter when Coach Prince called Frank's name.

At first Frank could scarcely believe his ears.

"Listen, Storey," the coach said. "Partridge, who's now playing left half is about shot. I've got to take him out and there's no one else to put in but you. It's your chance. Go to it!"

"O. K., coach."

Frank was a little dazed and surprised, but he donned his helmet and went out to relieve Partridge.

Up in the stands the crowd idly noticed the substitution. As far as they were concerned the game was over.

And Brewster was on the tail end. There wasn't a chance.

Many had already begun to crowd toward the exit tunnels. Yet several thousand still remained, more interested in watching the score board behind the goal posts, which flashed at regular intervals the scores of other contests being held all over the nation.

Suddenly a roar broke from the crowd. The score board had flashed the news that Albie Booth had scored a touchdown.

Down in the field Frank Storey had just taken the ball from the quarterback and was sprinting around left end.

He heard the roar of that crowd and thrilled.

At last! He was attracting some attention! They had recognized his genius! They were spurting him on to victory.

Frank's heart pounded joyfully. Grimly he set his teeth. He lowered his head and plunged. Five, 10, 15, 20 yards.

A Pencost man was veering close. Frank's free arm shot out. He heard the dull thud as his opened palm connected.

Then he looked up and his pulse leaped.

The field was clear. He was away! Up the field he plunged, madly, frantically.

Pencost men were at his heels, but they'd never catch him now.

Over he went. A touchdown!

The roar of the crowd was deafening.

They were still roaring when Captain Armstrong kicked the goal and brought the tally up to 12 to 7, in favor of Pencost.

Frank trotted back down the field. He looked at the crowd and smiled. He was happy.

He knew that they expected him to push over that winning touchdown. He wanted them to.

They were lined up again. The quarterback was barking the signals.

The ball was going to Frank. He set his teeth. He heard the crowd roar.

And he knew even before the ball reached his hands, he was going to make it. Nothing would stop him now. Nothing!

And nothing did. Frank was handed the ball in the next three plays, and each time he plunged nearer and nearer the goal line.

The screech of the referee's whistle sounded in his ear just as he passed over the chalk, bringing Brewster to victory.

And this time, as Frank turned and trotted back down the field, he heard them shout his name: "Storey! Storey! Storey! Yaaaah, Storey!"

Change in Furniture Design

After the execution of Charles I, of England in 1649, the Commonwealth form of government, with Cromwell assuming the protectorate, was responsible for a decided change in furniture design, but it was a short and uncomfortable one, notes a writer in the Detroit News. Anything tending to have the appearance of luxury or ease was discarded as sinful; and Cromwell so hated the aristocracy and the luxury in which they lived that he ordered the furnishings of 19 Jacobean palaces sold. The small amount of furniture made to take its place was as severe as he was in his principles. The backs of the chairs were very low and rigid, allowing no support to the head; there was no carving on the furniture and as little metal as possible was used for locks, hinges and pulls.

Edmonton, Alberta

Edmonton, Alberta, has its roots in the fur trade. Fort Edmonton was built on a high bank on the North Saskatchewan within the limits of the present capital of Alberta, in 1808.

Its forerunner, of the same name, was established in 1795 twenty miles farther down the river. George Sutherland of the Hudson's Bay company, who was the chief factor, named the post in deference to his clerk, John Prudens, who came from Edmonton, a suburb of London, England. The first fort was destroyed by Indians in 1807.

BEDTIME STORY FOR CHILDREN

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

REDDY'S INVITATION

THE mere mention of carrots always makes Jerry Muskrat's mouth water. Yes, sir, it does just that. You see, it is this way: Carrots to Jerry are very much like some rare fruit to you—something that you can get only once in awhile. Jerry never feels thoroughly at home on land, you know. He wants to be close to the water. So it is only once in a great while that he travels any great distance on land.

Now, of course, it isn't often that one finds carrots near the Laughing Brook or the Smiling Pool. When they are found there it usually is wisest to try to forget all about them because—can you guess why? Because there is very apt to be a trap close at hand.

As Jerry gained wisdom and learned about traps in the days before Farmer Brown's Boy had stopped all trapping along the Laughing Brook and the Smiling Pool, he had learned how to get the bait, sometimes without being caught, and so he had learned the taste of carrots. Several times he had been bold enough to go away over to Farmer Brown's garden down on the Green Meadows to look for carrots, but always he had been disappointed. Other good things he had found, but no carrots.

Thus it was that when Reddy Fox told him that he, Ruddy, had discovered some of the finest carrots that ever grew, Jerry was interested. Of course, how could he help but be?

"Did you say carrots?" asked Jerry, quite as if he wasn't sure that his ears hadn't played him a trick.

"I certainly did," replied Reddy Fox. "I certainly said carrots. They are the finest carrots ever I had laid my two eyes on, and in my travels I have seen a great many carrots. I don't eat carrots myself, but it is a fact that just looking at those carrots, Jerry, and thinking how much one who does eat them would enjoy them made me hungry. Then I thought of you." Jerry didn't see the sly wink in one of Reddy's eyes as he said this. "Yes," continued Reddy, "I thought of you and came straight over here to tell you about them. I remembered what you said about laying up stores for winter and it came to me that perhaps you would like to put some of these carrots away with the other good things. I certainly would if I liked carrots."

Jerry Muskrat's mouth watered so that Reddy Fox saw it water and turned away to hide a grin.

"Did you say that those carrots are very far away from here?" asked Jerry wistfully.

"I didn't say," replied Reddy. "Do you know where Farmer Brown's garden is?"

Jerry nodded. "Yes," said he. "At least I know where his corn field is."

"Well," replied Reddy promptly, "those carrots are there. They are right at the end of the corn field, the end nearest the Smiling Pool. There are rows and rows of them. I tell you what, Jerry, I haven't anything special to do this evening and I will be delighted to show you the way there and to help you bring back some of those carrots. Nothing could give me greater pleasure. Now don't say a word. I'll be over here shortly after the Black Shadows appear and we'll go over there together. I just won't take no for an answer. It will be the joy of my life to help you get those carrots."

"Thank you, it is ever so kind of you," replied Jerry, trying to be polite and not knowing what else to say. "I'll be right here watching for you as soon as the Black Shadows come tonight."

"I won't keep you waiting long," replied Reddy as he turned and trotted off.

GRAPHIC GOLF

ARMOUR KEEPS RIGHT ELBOW CLOSE TO BODY

POSITION OF RIGHT ARM

PHOTOGRAPHS of Tommy Armour invariably show the right elbow close to the right side at the top of the backswing. In fact keeping the right elbow close to the body aids a grooved swing but all golfers cannot accomplish this feat with even fair results. Such form seems to be the heritage of those golfers with strong hands and wrists, a quality not possessed by the rank and file of golfers. For these a more liberal looseness would perhaps bring better results. Here the right elbow is allowed to set comfortably away from the right side at the top of the backswing in the manner of Jose Jurado above. On the downswing it will of course come back to the side. This aids relaxation where in many cases having the elbow tight against the side only results in tying up the whole swing.

KEEP up your courage, Friend! The days are long; The walls are narrow, and the bed is hard. Outside the hospital, the summer song Of birds reminds you of your own back yard. But the long months have dimmed the memory Of your loved haunts, your budding locust tree. That star that you remember, swims in gloom. There is no world beyond your little room.

Keep firm your hand on hope, my blessed friend, For there await beyond your painted door The joys that will seem sweeter with the end Of illness, when you journey home once more. The night of suffering seems endless now, But so does winter for the apple bough. The summer moon of health will rise at last, And you'll return, with all the dark days past.

You will come home! Each hour that you are there Brings you a little nearer to that goal! Love will be waiting for you on the stair. There will be smiles of joy to cheer your soul. The Past will melt away; the years of pain Will seem a dream when you are home again. And the Gold Door of Promise will swing wide To let the sun of Happiness inside! WNU Service

Town Builds Own Lighting System

MAYOR AL KIRK, of West Elkton, Ohio, is here seen beside his newly erected "homemade municipal power house." West Elkton found itself unable to meet its light bill on account of decreased valuations. So Kirk shopped around, called in the boys and built a lighting system out of odds and ends, and put the wires underground in metropolitan style, all for less than $1,500, after the village had gone lightless for a year and a half. Now Kirk is planning a "homemade" water works for his village of 300 population.

The WEDDING MARCH MURDER

SYNOPSIS

Waiting in the minister's study while the wedding procession is being marshaled, Jim Franklin, about to be married to Doris Carmody, is stabbed to death. Callis Shipley, one of the bridesmaids, is obviously in a state of anxiety. Peter Cardigan, novelist, and amateur detective of some note, with Sergeant Kilday, of the New York police, begin the official investigation. The dagger used by the murderer is found. Franklin, while waiting, had many visitors, among them his mistress, an actress, "Choo Choo Train"; his intended wife's father, Ambrose Carmody; her brother, Rylie; Daniel Bullis, well-known politician, and an unknown woman in a blue frock, who had quarreled openly with Franklin.

CHAPTER II—Continued

"You wanted to see me?" a slender young man stood in the doorway.

The novelist's eyes took in the tweed-clad figure of the boy before him, in such strange contrast to the more formal wedding attire of the others.

"Yes, Mr. Carmody," his manner was engaging. "We were just mentioning you. I believe you came to see Mr. Franklin, at about twenty minutes to four."

"Yes, I was here."

"What was the object of your visit, my boy?"

Rylie hesitated, and glanced at his father.

"Just a minute, Son," the elderly Carmody laid a detaining hand on the young man's sleeve. The hand trembled, but his voice was firm as he faced the novelist. "My son had nothing to do with this," he said. "Of that I am sure. And I am not going to permit him to answer your questions, except under advisement from his attorney."

"If you are so sure of his innocence, Mr. Carmody," Peter's voice was as soft as satin, "what do you want with a lawyer?"

"Any man being questioned by the police has a right to the services and protection of his attorney," Carmody's voice rang defiantly through the room.

"I agree with you, Mr. Carmody," Peter said, his manner once more engagingly warm. "But I am sure you will agree that there are times, such as this, when the police have a right to expect the co-operation of law-abiding citizens, in their efforts to apprehend a criminal."

"The man who was to have been your son-in-law has been murdered. We are only seeking the assistance of every person who can help us shed some light on the circumstances of that crime. No one but the murderer himself has anything to fear from answering these questions. May I suggest that you step into Doctor Abernathy's study and discuss the matter with your son. Perhaps that will facilitate matters."

The old man's clutch tightened on his son's sleeve. The color flooding his face threw his snowy mustache into vivid relief. "An excellent idea," he commented briefly, and followed by Rylie, he crossed to the study, closing the door carefully behind him.

After a brief interval, Ambrose Carmody reappeared in the doorway. "My son has explained his reason for coming here to me," his eyes were on Kilday as he spoke. "Obviously, he had no connection with the crime. However, as there was a quarrel, he feels it necessary to make a brief statement, regarding it. I have no objection to this, but I reserve the right to halt the examination pending the advice of my attorney, should it, in my opinion, become necessary, in order to safeguard my boy's interests."

Rylie Carmody, standing behind his father, shrugged impatiently. "Don't make mountains of mole-hills, Dad," he said. Then, facing the detective, he continued:

"I had a quarrel with Franklin in Doctor Abernathy's study a short time before the wedding. It concerned an actress called Choo Choo Train, whom I had just been informed was his mistress."

"Naturally, I was angry. I went first to Franklin's apartment, and missing him there, I followed him on here. I asked him if the story I had heard were true. He admitted that it was. We quarreled, then, after which I hurried home in an effort to intercept my sister and father before they started for the church."

The sergeant clucked softly to himself. "You say Franklin admitted his connection with this woman?"

"He did to me. He even laughed about it," Rylie replied bitterly. "He called me a foolish kid and told me I was old enough to understand such things. Thank God, I'm not!" The boy's lips were quivering but he rushed on. "He laughed at me when I said I'd stop the wedding, too! Stood there and laughed at me!"

"Did he laugh when you threatened to kill him?" the sergeant interpolated in a suave tone.

"Hold on!" Ambrose Carmody warned. "Don't answer that sort of question, Son."

"Why not?" The young man turned impatiently on his father. "You don't think I killed him, do you?"

He turned again to the detective. "Of course not. I never made any threats."

"You just told us you threatened to stop the wedding."

Rylie shrugged impatiently. "I mean physical threats. That never entered my mind. I only intended to inform my father of this woman. That would have been sufficient to stop the wedding."

"And did you?" Kilday's tone was judicial.

"No, I arrived home too late. My father and sister had already left for the church."

Peter interrupted him. "Didn't it occur to you that they would have left? It was already twenty minutes of four."

"It didn't occur to me," answered the boy. "I guess I had lost all track of time."

"Did anyone see you, at home?"

"Yes. The butler. He told me they had been gone fully fifteen minutes."

"So I suppose you came on back to the church?"

"Yes."

"Did you intend to halt the wedding?"

"Yes. Defiantly."

"How?"

"I was going to tell Doris and Dad what I knew about Choo Choo Train."

"That was the only thought that had entered your mind, up to that time?" Peter urged gently.

"That was the only thought I ever had," replied the boy curtly.

"Ah. And when you arrived here, how does it happen that you never saw your sister or your father?"

"I was too late—or at least I thought I was," Rylie leaned forward eagerly, now. "When I got back, I could hear the 'Wedding March,' on the organ. I thought everything was over."

"Then what did you do?"

"There was nothing I could do."

The young man shrugged helplessly.

"You didn't enter the church?"

"No."

"Then where have you been since

"You Wanted to See Me?"

the wedding?" Peter intended the question to sound casual.

Rylie hesitated, clasping and unclasping his hands nervously in his lap. "I—I've just been driving around," he answered finally.

"But of course you've talked to some one who was at the wedding. At home, perhaps?"

"No, I haven't been home," the youth denied.

"Then how did you know Jim Franklin had been killed?" The question shot home like the swift thrust of a rapier.

Rylie glanced nervously at his father, then back to the novelist.

The elder Carmody's knuckles showed white, as he gripped his son's arm. "I don't like your tone," he interrupted angrily. "Don't answer that question, Son."

"Carmody," Peter had grown suddenly stern, "you don't have to answer, but if you don't you are in very grave danger of being accused of this murder."

The young man hesitated. "All right, I'll answer," he said at length. "I haven't anything to hide. I should have told you the whole truth in the first place. Callis Shipley told me about it. I have seen her. I took her home from the church."

"But you told us you never got back to the church until after everything was over?" Peter endeavored to shake his story.

"No," the youth denied. "I said that when I got back, I heard the organ playing the 'Wedding March,' and thought everything was over. I was standing across the street, by my car, and Callis came running across to me. She asked me to take her home."

"Oh! And she told you what had happened then?"

"Yes. I came straight back here, of course."

Cardigan arose abruptly. "There's only one flaw in that," he said. "How could Callis Shipley have known what happened here?"

The young man's face went pale. Involuntarily, he clenched his hands. "I guess she knew, just like everybody else knew," he said. His voice sounded strangled, far away.

"But every one else didn't know," Cardigan pointed out. "We have taken special precautions to see that no one else found out. There has not yet been any announcement made concerning Franklin's death."

"I guess Callis didn't say there had been a murder," the boy's voice was frantic. "She just said something terrible had happened and that the wedding had been postponed. I guess I must have jumped at conclusions about the murder."

"Rather odd, wasn't it, that you should jump to that kind of conclusion?"

"No. No, I don't think so." Rylie brushed the hair back from his forehead and swallowed nervously. "I don't think it was so odd. It would take something very unusual to stop a wedding, wouldn't it?"

"Very unusual," Peter agreed. "And you had undertaken to stop this one."

"You think I did it, don't you?" The youth pointed a trembling finger at the novelist. "You're accusing me of murdering him! That's what these questions amount to. Do you think I'd have come back here, if I had been guilty? Wouldn't I have run away?" His voice broke. "Wouldn't I?"

Cardigan looked at him gravely. "That's why some men don't run away, Rylie," he said slowly. "They think it's safer to fight it out than to run the risk of being caught, because once they start to run, they invite suspicion."

Rylie Carmody gripped the arms of his chair. "I'm not afraid," he said slowly. "I didn't do it. You can't convict me of something I didn't do."

"Then how were you so sure there would be no wedding?" Peter queried swiftly.

"I—I wasn't sure."

"And yet you never took the trouble to dress for it," the novelist pointed out. "You are wearing a tweed suit."

Rylie glanced at his coat, as though for the first time realizing its existence. His answer was deliberate.

"From the time I heard about Choo Choo Train and Jim Franklin," he said, "I forgot all about the wedding. I've told you about that. I came here to see Franklin, and then went home to try to catch Doris before she left. Failing in that, I came straight back here. I forgot all about dressing."

"You have told us that several times," said Peter. "Suppose you tell us how you heard about this actress. Who told you?"

Once again Rylie hesitated. Then, "Web Spears told me," he said. "He told me all about it at the club, after lunch."

"Who is this Web Spears?"

"Webster Spears? Why, he's—oh, every one knows Web. His father was my father's friend, before he died. We've been friends always."

"And was there ever anything between this young Spears and your sister, Doris? Any boy-and-girl affair. Were they ever sweethearts?"

"Yes," reluctantly. "But that's all over, now."

"Since when?"

"I don't know. For some time, though. I'm sure of that."

Peter's next question was addressed to the senior Carmody.

"I suppose you knew young Spears pretty well, too, didn't you, Mr. Carmody?"

"Of course. I've known him all his life."

"Well enough to recognize his voice over the telephone?"

"Well," Ambrose Carmody pursed his lips thoughtfully. "I don't know. I might."

Peter followed up this question with another. "You told us, earlier, that some one who refused to give his name, telephoned you this afternoon and told you about Choo Choo Train. Could that have been Webster Spears?"

The elder Carmody shook his head doubtfully. "I don't know," he said. "I hardly think so."

"Why?"

"Because Web would have given me his name," declared the old man with dignity.

Peter was evidently through with the interview. With his hands crammed in his coat pockets, he ambled about the room, his blue eyes gleaming beneath their shaggy brows.

The sergeant motioned Peter to follow him and strode into the study. He made sure the door was shut before he spoke. "Nine suspects already, and we know who eight of them are. The devil of it is, we can show a motive for most of them."

Peter watched silently as his friend crossed to the rector's desk where the contents of the slain man's pockets had been methodically arranged. They had been few—a bill-fold, some loose change, two handkerchiefs, one of them still folded, and a leather encased ring on which there were seven keys.

Kilday picked up the keys, weighing them idly, his eyes still clouded in thought. "Nine suspects, and we know eight of them. But this woman in blue—if it was Callis Shipley, then Doctor Abernathy is trying to protect her. Why? If she was the woman in blue," the detective continued deliberately, "we'll have to find a way to shake Doctor Abernathy's story."

"But if she wasn't"—again he examined the keys in his hand—"these keys may tell us something. If the woman in blue killed Franklin, jealousy was probably the motive for the crime. We know Choo Choo Train was his mistress. He could have had another. He had a reputation for infidelity, where women were concerned. If that is true, then one of these keys probably fits the door of her apartment."

Peter examined those keys minutely. Two were small, of the type frequently used for desks and files. The other five were larger. Any one of them might fit an apartment door. Kilday might be on the right track.

"How about young Carmody?" the novelist queried. "What do you think of his story?"

"I can't afford to think about it till I check up on it," the detective replied grimly. "Come on, let's go visit Callis Shipley. I've got to know if she was the woman in blue."

"And," he added ominously, as they left by the rear door of the study, "one of these keys may fit her apartment. You never can tell."

ILLINOIS STATE NEWS

Illinois has abolished real estate and personal property taxes for state purposes. It is the first complete substitution of a sales tax for property taxes any state has made. The step was taken after the state tax levy board decided a 2 per cent tax on retail sales, with perhaps some help from liquor taxation, would be adequate to replace the $35,000,000 levied annually in recent years on general property. The decision affects state taxes only. Cities, counties, park systems, sanitary districts, and other local units will continue to tax real and personal property. But abolition of the state's share of the revenue bill will result in a saving ranging from 7 to 19 per cent to property owners in the state.

Savings of $3,554,490 were effected for users of electric current by the Illinois commerce commission during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1933, it was announced by Benjamin F. Lindheimer, chairman of the commission.

Rev. Norman B. Wood, seventy-six years old, of Aurora, died of a heart attack Christmas day. Mr. Wood was the author of a number of books dealing with the history and customs of the American Indian.

Mayor Kelly of Chicago revoked the licenses of 12 bars as he continued his campaign to keep gangsters and other undesirable persons out of the liquor business in Chicago. Five of the places lost their licenses because of alliances of some sort with gangsters. The other seven licenses were revoked on charges of immorality or other violations of city ordinances.

While shoppers and clerks held behind counters, four robbers held up a Kresge five-and-ten-cent store in downtown Springfield. They fought off two city detectives and escaped with approximately $2,000. The detectives reported they wounded one of the bandits.

Chicago schools, along with other public buildings, are to be decorated with the works of 168 needy artists now on the pay roll of the federal public works art project. It was learned. Superintendent of Schools Bogan directed the principals of 100 schools to answer the questionnaires sent out by the Public School Art society seeking information as to their needs in the way of art objects.

One of the principal business blocks in St. Charles was declared nearly a total loss as a result of a fire that swept through the pioneer department store of J. F. Colson & Co. and offices above it to cause damage estimated at more than $50,000. Included in the loss were several valuable oil paintings, three belonging to the John W. Gates estate and four to Herbert P. Crane. They had been on display in the store during the holiday season.

Two twelve-year-old lads fought it out for the title of champion speller of Illinois at the annual contest held in Springfield in connection with the eighteenth meeting of the Illinois State Teachers' association. Victory went to Robert Thompson of Melvin, Ford county. James Wilson, Canton, won second place. Third place was won by Wilma Davis, Clark county, and fourth by George W. Rhoades, Platt county. Winners of fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth places were Robert Magill, Palestine; Kathleen Tott, East Peoria; Eugene Scott, Herrin, and Naidene Taylor, Versailles, respectively.

States Attorney Charles E. Mason of Lake county said that criminal action would not be taken against Frank and William Nottke after a coroner's jury laid the death of their seventy-two-year-old mother, Mrs. Marie Nottke, to "shock and exposure." She died a few hours after being found huddled in the bitter cold on the back porch of her home. The jury in its verdict stated that evidence showed that both sons were intoxicated and fighting at the time, but nothing indicated Mrs. Nottke had been forced outside.

Dog racing in Illinois received another blow when the Appellate court for the Fourth Illinois district at Mount Vernon unanimously declined to order Jerome Munie, the raiding sheriff of St. Clair county, to appear before a city judge on a contempt citation. Munie was cited by William F. Borders, city judge of East St. Louis, for contempt after he arrested officials of the Mississippi Valley Kennel club the night of last August 7 when they attempted to operate races.

Fall sown acreage in Illinois on December 1 totaled 1,850,000 acres, an increase of 137,000 acres, as compared with 1932, a report on a combined survey by the state and federal departments of agriculture revealed. The December 1 condition of Illinois winter wheat is 85 per cent compared with 83 per cent a year ago, and the ten-year average of 85 per cent. With few exceptions the state winter wheat acreage was sown after fly-free dates and under favorable soil moisture conditions.

When Wesley Tritt, forty-six, was locked up by the police at Monee for questioning in the slaying of his friend, Archie Clark, a fellow worker, as the climax of an argument, he discovered his son, Floyd, was in a cell adjoining. The son was arrested a week before on a robbery charge.

Frank Fron, twelve years old, shot and fatally wounded his father, Ignatz, in defense of his mother in their home in the village of Clarendon Hills, near Hinsdale in Du Page county. The wounded man died four hours after the shooting and the young killer was lodged in the country jail.

SIX MILLIONS NOW GET FEDERAL PAY

One Out of Twenty Is Working for Uncle Sam.

Washington.—More than 6,000,000 men and women now are on Uncle Sam's pay roll.

One out of every twenty persons in the country has a federal position of one kind or another. Never before in peace time has the percentage been so high.

Most of the federal jobs are temporary, with approximately 4,000,000 men and women at work on civil works projects. More than 1,300,000 are employed by the Tennessee Valley authority, the civilian conservation corps, and the public works administration.

Regular government employees total about 577,000, then the army has 119,000 men, the navy and marine corps 94,000 and the Post Office department 90,000, exclusive of those listed as regular employees. Other federal agencies and corporations employ about 25,000 more not listed as federal workers on the records.

In finding jobs for millions, the President has given work to thousands in administrative and clerical positions.

Since March 4 civil service statistics show that the number of federal employees has increased from 565,432 to 577,170. Private corporations controlled by the government have added approximately 20,000 persons to their pay rolls.

The number of men and women working in the more important of the new bureaus created by Mr. Roosevelt follow:

Agricultural adjustment administration, 3,729.

National recovery administration, 1,958.

Public works administration, 2,300 in administrative departments. About 1,000,000 men are employed on PWA projects.

Tennessee Valley authority, 2,800 in administrative work; 24,000 to be added to construction pay rolls within the next few weeks.

Civilian conservation corps, 315,000 amateur foresters and 18,045 supervisors.

Civil works administration, 4,150,000, including relief recipients and administrators.

Federal alcohol control administration, 65, with several hundred more probably to be employed after congress acts on liquor taxes.

Federal emergency relief administration, 144.

Farm credit administration, 6,959.

Federal Home Owners' Loan corporation, 15,000 (approximately).

Federal Deposit Insurance corporation, 2,000 (approximately).

Railroad administration, 97.

Reconstruction Finance corporation, 2,449.

Other lesser agencies, 5,000.

These figures fluctuate from day to day, with the various agencies hiring much of their help on a temporary basis. In the aggregate, however, the totals remain fairly stable, despite a tendency to grow larger as the score or more of federal reconstruction organizations become more fully organized.

Shot by Daughter, 15, Naval Officer Dies

San Diego, Calif.—Ernest J. Turley, retired naval officer, died in the Naval hospital here from gunshot wounds inflicted by his daughter Mattie, fifteen. Authorities at St. John's, Ariz., the Turleys' home, said the girl asserted she had shot her father. Turley was wounded in his home and was rushed here in an airplane.

The daughter testified in an Arizona juvenile court that in an outburst of anger with her mother the board told her to kill her father so that her mother, Mrs. Dorothy Irene Turley, "could marry a young cowboy."

Bombs at Foochow Damage American Mission Church

Burke at Foochow, China, reported to the State department that the church and other property of the American board mission there had been damaged when eight Nanking government planes dropped between 20 and 30 bombs on the city. THE BAPTISM AND TEMPTATION OF JESUS CHRIST

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 3:13-4:11. GOLDEN TEXT—"Wherefore in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people. Hebrews 2:17.

PRIMARY TOPIC—When Jesus Was Baptized.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Meets the Test.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Jesus Faces His Life Work.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—God's Victorious Son.

The baptism and temptation of Jesus should not be thought of as part of his preparation for his great work, as is represented by many writers. They should rather be viewed as the formal entrance of the Messiah, the king upon his mission. In the baptism we have the act of dedication of himself to his work which made full a righteousness, and in the temptation we have a record of his first official conflict with the devil whose works he came to destroy.

I. The Baptism of Jesus, the King (3:13-17).

1. His coming to John (v. 13).

While the forerunner was discharging his office, the king emerged from his seclusion at Nazareth and demanded baptism at John's hands.

2. John's hesitancy (v. 14). The incongruity of this demand with the purpose of baptism brought from John a protest, but upon Jesus' satisfactory explanation John baptized him.

3. The significance of his baptism (v. 15). Its significance is found in harmony with the central purpose of his coming into the world, which was to secure for his people salvation through death and resurrection. This act was the official entrance upon his work. It was an act of consecration on his part to the work of saving his people through sacrifice. Christ was baptized not because he had sinned, but because he took the place of sinners to be a substitute for them.

4. Approval from the opened heavens (vv. 16, 17). Immediately following his consecration to his work the heavens were opened and the Spirit came and abode upon him, followed by words of approval from the Father.

II. The Temptation of Jesus, the King (4:1-11).

This temptation was the

The V. F. W. Legislative Program

ARTHUR C. SCHILLER,

Publicity Chairman

With the convening of the 73rd Congress at Washington, D. C., in January, the attention of the people of this country will be focused on national legislative matters. The Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, representing as it does a cross section of several million American citizens, plans to submit to Congress, a legislative program which is of direct and personal interest to every taxpayer, and every voter in the country.

Ever since its organization in 1899, the V. F. W., has had for the prime motive of its existence, the care of our disabled comrades. We cheerfully have assumed the obligation of watching over the welfare of our comrades who have gone on before. For the past thirty-four years we have been in close and intimate contact with the problems which confront the disabled veterans and their dependants. Because of this experience and insight, we honestly believe that we are logically entitled to make certain recommendations to Congress and to you, the voters of America in behalf of the welfare of these disabled veterans of the armed service of our country.

The V. F. W., is concentrating its efforts at present on a six-fold legislative program based on the repeal of the cruel and vicious so-called Economy Act of March 20, 1933. Passed during a period of hysteria, when Congress and the entire country was swept by the fear of economic chaos—adopted without due consideration by either the House or the Senate, accepted under the pressure of assurances that the truly disabled veteran would suffer no harm, the Economy aims and purposes of the V. F. W.

The Act destroyed with one sweep, legislation that was placed on the statute books after fifteen years of long and deliberate study. What is the result? Thousands and thousands of disabled veterans are being penalized by this Act. In spite of modifications made in the Act subsequent to its passage, modifications which constituted a public confession to the charge that the Economy Act, in its original form, was cruel and heartless, thousands of veterans were completely eliminated from the pension and compensation rolls.

In brief outline, these are the six great principles that the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States believe should be the foundation of all veteran welfare legislation.

First, federal responsibility for the veteran. The bulk of federal taxes is paid by those citizens who enjoy large incomes and who have profited the most through the years of America's prosperity. It is unfair and un-American to place this burden of cost upon the local community and local charities, when the small taxpayer already is crushed beneath the burden of heavy taxation.

Second, we seek adequate relief for those veterans suffering from injury or disease incurred in actual war service.

Third, we ask relief for those veterans suffering from disabilities due either to injury, disease or old age and who are no longer able to carry on.

Fourth, we demand relief for the widows and orphans of all veterans regardless of the cause of the veteran's death.

Fifth, we do not believe that compensation, pensions or hospitalization should be withheld from any veteran or his dependents until they can prove they are paupers. This qualification of pauperism utterly violates the American spirit of fair play. It bears the stamp of cruel ingratitude.

Sixth, we make one request, and only one, which effects the able bodied World War veteran. I refer to the immediate cash payment of adjusted service certificates. This question is of special significance to the economic welfare of the nation as a whole at this particular time. The National Recovery Act, which has the unanimous endorsement of the V. F. W., depends upon its success on the increased purchasing power of the masses. Additional money must be placed in circulation in every corner of the country if we are all to enjoy the benefits of this process. Immediate cash payment to approximately three million, five hundred thousand veterans, of the two billion, five hundred million dollars owed them by the U. S. government, would place virtually every cent of this vast sum in immediate circulation. It would be used to pay off debts, to pay back rent, taxes, grocery bills. It would be used to buy supplies now sorely needed and by this wide dissemination, immediate cash payment of adjusted service certificates would stimulate trade and commerce, create jobs and otherwise assist in making the National Recovery Act something more than an ambitious dream or a beautiful vision.

Kenneth, the oldest son of Mrs. Ida Benson is ill at the home of his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Anton Benson. He has swollen glands in his neck, which is quite painful. Mrs. Ida Benson is also ill in bed.

New Chevrolet Prices Announced

Prices on the new 1934 "kne-action" Chevrolet have been announced by William E. Holler, general sales manager of the company upon his arrival from Detroit for the New York Automobile show.

Prices on the new line of cars are: Five-window coupe, $565; sport coupe with rumble seat, $605; coach, $585; sedan, $645; town-sedan, with built in trunk, $615; sport roadster with rumble seat, $545, and cabriolet with rumble seat $665. These prices represent an average increase of $70 in list price over the list prices of the 1933 Chevrolet line.

This increase is directly in line with the recent prediction of Alfred P. Sloan, Jr., president of General Motors, that automobile prices for 1934 would advance approximately 15 per cent; however, due to co-operation between Chevrolet and its 10,000 dealers, the actual increase in the cost to the purchaser is only 8 per cent.

Actually, Mr. Holler points out in his statement, Chevrolet's delivered prices throughout the United States generally, would show an average increase of only 8 per cent over the delivered prices which prevailed in 1933. This is made possible by the Chevrolet dealer organization's admirable cooperation with the factory in sharing with the factory reduction in profits.

"Delivered prices," said Mr. Heller, "are what the public is interested in because it represents the cost of an automobile standing in front of the purchaser's home. List, or advertised prices, are the prices f. o. b. the factory."

"It is particularly fitting at this time, when the buying public is constantly being reminded to carefully weigh values before making any purchase, to emphasize delivered rather than list prices. Naturally, delivered prices will vary in various parts of the country, due to difference in freight charges alone, but the average delivered price will show an increase of approximately 8 per cent."

ORLAND PARK

The regular meeting of the Orland Park Woman's Club was held January 4th in the James Creer Building. Miss Richter of the Community Center spoke on conditions in Kentucky and the great need of the mountain people. A representative of the Public Welfare asked the Woman's Club to start a class to be taught by a Red Cross nurse. This class was started January 8th and has twenty members who are eager to learn how to preserve their health and how to care for members of their family who become ill. This class is open to any one.

In order to receive a certificate from the Red Cross each member must attend at least 20 hours of these classes. The next class will be held January 15th from one to four p. m. This is one of the Red Cross projects to help us help ourselves in time of illness. All the women of the community are urged to come out. There are no fees. As one member has so aptly put it "This is something all women are called on to do some time or other, so let us prepare ourselves so when the emergency comes we can feel that we know how to carry on our duty."

A bunco party will be held Saturday night, January 13th in the St. Michael church parlors. Every one is cordially invited to attend.

Harry Cox who has been very ill with pneumonia is slowly improving. The Royal Neighbor Juveniles met last week. Mrs. Hilda Cox was in charge of the meeting.

The Bible Class of the Orland Park M. E. church held a social at the home of Mrs. Jacob Kramer on Wednesday night.

A car driven by Louis Lucas was knocked into a ditch at 143rd and Greenland Tuesday afternoon when struck by a CWA truck. Mr. Lucas had signaled the truck driver that he was going to turn off 143rd on to Greenland, but owing to the icy pavement the truck driver could not stop quick and hit the rear of the Lucas car. Both cars were damaged but no one was hurt. Both machines were going west at the time of the smash.

The Orland Fire Department at a meeting of the village board Monday night suggested to the board that the lot about the village hall be landscaped and a driveway be laid under the CWA work plan. It is understood that the board has approved the project. Mr. Paul Doyle of Orland Park is to have charge of the landscape work it is understood.

Corn-Hog Program Begun In Will County

Appointment of a temporary county campaign committee by the state advisory committee will mark the official opening of the government's corn-hog production adjustment program in Will County, it is announced by Farm Adviser L. W. Braham. As soon as the temporary county committee is appointed it in turn will name community committees, and the work of the campaign will be in full swing. The temporary county committee will be composed of from five to nine members.

H. W. Mumford, dean of the College of Agriculture, University of Illinois and director of the extension service, is chairman of the state advisory committee of four members. Serving with him are J. R. Fulkerson, Jerseyville; Ray E. Miller, director of livestock marketing for the Illinois Agricultural Association, Chicago, and J. H. Lloyd, assistant director, of the Illinois State Department of Agriculture, Springfield.

Official contract forms and instructions should be here soon, according to word which Farm Adviser Braham has received from the extension service of the agricultural college.

The contract form carries two spaces for the signature of the producer and two for the signature of the landlord. The producer's first signature constitutes an application for contract and with it the producer will furnish his own record on the production of all crops on the farm for the past two years, a record of ways in which the corn crop was used during the past two years and a history of crop production on the contracted acreage during the past five years. These figures will be checked and, if necessary, adjusted by the county allotment committee to be selected later. The contract then will be resubmitted to the producer for his second signature. After acceptance of the doubly-signed form by the Secretary of Agriculture, the contract form becomes binding on both parties.

Operatic Celebrities Coming To Chicago Grand Opera

Chicago is to see and hear another celebrated operatic personality not heretofore presented in local lyrical drama and again give acclaim to the outstanding favorites of past weeks as it enters upon the fourth and second to last week of its experimental revival of civic opera, the success of which already seems amply indicated by consistently growing patronage.

Appearing only once with the newly formed Chicago Grand Opera Company, Sigrid Onegin, Stockholm contralto of French and German parentage, whose concert appearances here already have enshrined her in the hearts music lovers, sings the role of Dalila in Camille Saint-Saens' gratifying scoring of a biblical theme, "Samson et Dalila" to be given in French at the Saturday matinee on January 20th. With Madame Onegin is to appear, also for the first time before local operagoers, Pasquale Ferrara, golden voiced tenor of Italy in the role of Samson.

The week is to open auspiciously with Maria Jeritza returning for her second and final appearance in this brief season, and that "Lohengrin," the first and only German opera to be presented Dimitri Onofrei is to assume the title role, his one appearance of the week, and Pasquale Amato will be heard for the last time this season as Telramund.

The third new bill of the week, Ponchielli's masterful opus, "La Gioconda," with its large singing cast and its ringing choruses, is to present Rosa Raisa in one of her most colorful roles. This opera brings the week to a climax but Madame Raisa is to be heard previously in repetition of "Turandot" the famous uncompleted opera of Giacomo Puccini, finished by Franco Alfano, scheduled for Tuesday night, with the original cast of its Chicago premiere last week, which attracted a brilliant capacity audience.

Further good news for opera fans is contained in the announcement that Mario Chamlee has been induced to make another appearance, this time singing Enzo to Madame Raisa's Gioconda.

A new jester, fashioned by the vocalistic and histrionic skill of Carlo Morelli, sensational baritone who made his American debut with the Chicago organization last week, is to be submitted on Wednesday night when Verdi's poignant "Rigoletto" again comes to a hearing, the seat tariff of the previous New Year's Eve performance having been lowered to regulation levels—the lowest yet charged by any major operatic undertaking. The tenor and soprano of this production are yet to be announced, General Manager Paul Longone promising to surprise his patrons most agreeably when negotiations for their services have been concluded.

Mindful of the great success scored by Ruth Page and Harold Kreutzberg and their dance group in a richly costumed interpretation of Ravel's Bolero at last week's concluding performance, Manager Longone and Ballet Master Laurent Novikoff have arranged for the appearance of Ruth Pryor and Bentley Stone with the famous "Dance of the Hours" ballet in "La Gioconda."

The schedule of operas for the week, with leading principals and conductors, is as follows:

Monday night, January 15, "Lohengrin" (in German), with Mmes. Jeritza and Sharnova and Messrs. Onofrei, Amato, Baromeo and Zimmerman (debut); Conductor, Weber.

Tuesday night, "Turandot" (in Italian), with Mmes. Raisa and Claire and Messrs. Lindi, Frigerio and Baromeo; Conductor, Papi.

Wednesday night, "Rigoletto" (in Italian), with leading principals yet to be announced, Papi conducting and Novikoff ballet.

Saturday matinee, "Samson et Dalila" (in French), with Madame Onegin and Messrs. Ferrara and Morelli; Conductor, Weber, and Novikoff ballet.

Saturday night, "La Gioconda" (in Italian), with Mmes. Raisa, Lamance and Paggi and Messrs. Chamlee, Morelli and Sivovik; Conductor, Papi, and Novikoff ballet, with Ruth Pryor and Bentley Stone, Premier dancers, in "Dance of the Hour."

THE WORRY CHASER

As Mr. Flynn replaced the receiver on its hook, he turned to his wife who had also risen from a troubled pillow when the telephone bell rang.

"The children are safe," he said.

"What kept them?" she asked, a look of relief dawning on her face.

"The car broke down and they couldn't get it fixed. So they're staying in town. They called from Aunt Martha's."

"Well," said Mrs. Flynn, "that saves a lot of worry. Now I can go to sleep. I'm glad we have a telephone or they couldn't have called us tonight. We certainly would be foolish to try to do without it."

Every home in town or country should have a telephone. Call our Business Office or any telephone employee will gladly help you place your order.

UNFAIR DEMANDS

In the face of a subnormal demand for service resulting in greatly lowered revenue, in the face of increasing uncontrollable expenses and in the face of rapidly rising costs, the public utility companies serving the northern Illinois area are the only industry being asked to reduce prices.

Most authorities agree that northern Illinois is dependent in a large measure for prosperity and growth upon these companies. Any injury to them affecting their credit or service inevitably means great damage to the community at large.

The maintenance of the credit of these institutions is entirely possible with reasonable rates (and that means only cost of producing the service and a reasonable interest return to investors).

Whether present rates with improved conditions will be adequate for the restoration of earnings, remains to be seen. But the important thing from the public's viewpoint is that good service be preserved.

"Too Many Cooks Spoil The Broth"

WOOZY

"Just as soon as Allen recovered from the injury to his head he came around and proposed."
"I understand he has acted queerly since he got well."

All Just Alike

A slightly hilarious guest at a party embraced a strange woman by mistake. He apologized: "Excuse me, madam," he said, "but I thought you were my wife."

"You're a nice sort of husband for any woman to have, you clumsy brute," said the woman, angrily.
"There," exclaimed the jovial one, triumphantly, "you talk just like her, too."

The Nerve

"Mr. Jones," commenced the rather timid-looking suitor, "er—ah—that is, can—or—I—will—you"
"Why, yes, my boy, you may have her," smiled the girl's father.
The young man gaped. "What's that? Have whom?" he asked.
"My daughter, of course," replied Jones. "That's what you mean. You want to marry her, don't you?"
"Why, no, sir," said the young man. "I just wanted to know if you could lend me ten dollars."
"Certainly not, sir," said Jones sharply. "Why I hardly know you."

NERVE, MAYBE

"I don't see how Mary had the face to take Carrie's beau away from her."
"It was her face that did it, however, I am sure."

DIPLOMACY

"So you have joined a golf club."
"I had to do it. The only chance of seeing some of the men I have to do business with is to get 'em on the golf links."

Goat in Sheepskin

A negro was telling his minister that he had "got religion."
"Dat's fine, brothah; but is you sure you is going to lay aside sin?" asked the minister.
"Yessuh. Ah's done it already."
"An' is you gwine to pay up all yoh debts?"
"Wait a minute, Pahson! You ain't talking religion now—you is talkin' bissness!"—The Tatler Magazine.

Human Sparrow

"Well, old man, get through the hard times all right?"
"Oh, so so."
"Still occupying that penthouse?"
"Yes, I've managed somehow to keep a roof under my feet."

Oversight

Bill—Oh, I say, old chap, did I borrow $5 of you last week?
Jim—No, you didn't.
Bill—How careless of me. Could you let me have it now?

"It didn't work."
"What didn't?"
"My scheme for playing the stock market."

TIME NEEDED

"How does your wife like the new neighborhood?"
"Not very well as yet. You know she's not well enough acquainted with the other married women in the block to talk about them."

Seasonable Companions

Two men were traveling in a smoking compartment of a north-bound train.
Presently one, hoping to break the ice, asked his fellow traveler for a match to light his pipe. After this had been conceded they began talking.
"What's your line of business?" asked the first.
"It may sound strange," said the other, "but I'm a pepper traveler."
The first man threw out his hand.
"Shake," he said. "I'm a salt seller."

SEEKS ALEXANDER'S TOMB

Enthusiastic over his proposed expedition to find the body of Alexander the Great, Howard Carter, discoverer of the tomb of Tut-Ankh-Amen has arrived in Alexandria, Egypt, to raise the necessary $240,000 for the venture. Should Alexander's tomb be discovered, he said, it would be the most important archeological find ever made in Egypt, even more important than the Tut-Ankh-Amen discovery. The contents of Alexander the Great's tomb, he believes, would consist chiefly of metal, whose intrinsic value would not be as great as the Tut-Ankh-Amen relics. There is the possibility, he added, that Alexander's tomb has been covered by the sea. The system he would use in searching for the tomb he described as "sondage," or sinking of pipes.

INDIGESTION—GAS

Mr. Fred Leroy Riggs of 314 Hayward St., Peoria, Ill., said: "I had frequent attacks of indigestion—belched gas frequently—it was pretty hard for me to keep food on my stomach, my nerves were bad and I couldn't sleep at night. I used Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and it drove away the stomach distress and the nervous condition. I felt like a new man." Sold by all druggists.

Tormented for Five Years with Dandruff

Healed by Cuticura

"For nearly five years I was tormented with dandruff. My scalp itched and burned and became very sore and red from scratching. My hair became thin and dry and fell out in handfuls, and the dandruff scaled off and could be seen on my clothing."

"I had lost all hope of ever being healed. A friend told me about Cuticura Soap and Ointment and I sent for a free sample. The first application stopped the itching so I bought more, and I used only one cake of Cuticura Soap with two boxes of Cuticura Ointment and I was healed." (Signed) Mrs. M. L. BEAUTY TALKS

By

MARJORIE DUNCAN

DYEING OR BLEACHING THE HAIR

MY ADVICE to women who are tired of the color nature gave their tresses is: think not twice but several times before you decide—and then if you must dye, let an expert do it. Home dyeing is such a difficult task and success a rather rare phenomenon that it is best to follow the advice of Puck—"don't."

In the first place, as a color artist Nature is very clever. Look around you. See how well skin, eyes, brows, lashes and hair usually go together. Sometimes even a slight bleaching or dyeing of the hair gives a very artificial look to the color scheme.

There are many excellent dyes and bleaches on the market, so it is not these products (particularly in the finer grade) that I object to. It is the fact that the dyeing process is difficult and should be done by an expert.

Having found a specialist who really does excellent work and satisfied with the first dyeing, it is well to return to the same expert when the hair needs retouching and when the new hair that has since grown in at the roots needs dyeing. She will know what dye was used before (and it is important that the same sort of dye be used again). She will know how much to use and so on. And it is very intricate and technical to get an even and natural coloring and have the new hair that is being "touched up" blend perfectly with the hair already dyed. One thing women do not remember is that hair once dyed must be retouched ever so often. Many are under the mistaken impression that one sitting is all that is necessary. It isn't.

There are still many women who feel that graying hair is a symbol of age, even though most beauty authorities contend that it can be made a definite mark of beauty and distinction. If graying hair affects your spirit as well as your looks, have it "touched up"—but let an expert do it. If your hair is streaked and rinses won't help, you may dye it. If hair is dull and drab as a result of illness and corrective treatments such as brushing and massage seem slow and rinses won't help, dye. If graying hair has yellowish streaks in it, and french blueing or ready prepared rinses won't help—dye.

Otherwise—I sincerely feel that too many women who are slow and lax about keeping their hair healthy and lustrous and lovely by such sane measures as brushing and massage are quick to bleach and dye.

SELECTION OF POWDER

I AM not a stickler for statistics, but I am quite sure that every day some young lady somewhere is experiencing the thrill of dabbing her nose with powder for the first time.

Mothers should help their young daughters in the selection of a good powder. They should prepare their daughters for the problem of powder and make-up, just as they do for the problems of life.

Today we are concerned with the young girl's first acquaintance with powder. It should be a very good powder. Her delicate loveliness deserves the best, and it can only be preserved with the best creams, lotions and cosmetics. No harsh, caustic materials should touch her skin.

I emphasize this particularly, not so much for the more modern of our mothers who allow their young daughters to use powder. They know the requisites of a good powder and usually buy a box for daughter or allow her to use some of their own. But it is surprising how many mothers, even in this day and age, raise a firm maternal hand and shake their heads negatively to daughter's every plea for a little powder. Somehow the superstition still exists that powder is harmful. Bad powder is bad for the skin. But a good quality powder, a powder that is made of non-caustic materials, contains only pure ingredients, a powder that is of that just right texture will never hurt the skin.

By that just-right texture I mean not too heavy, for a heavy powder may clog the pores. On the other hand, a too fine powder does not stay on very long. The slightest whiff of wind will blow it off. The perfect powder clings without giving that obviously powdered look. It gives the skin a delicate and lovely finish and tones down shine. But it should not give the skin a dull and dry as parchment look nor should it take away that fresh dewiness that is so alluring a characteristic of the healthy young skin.

Remember these requisites. Remember that the shade of powder must blend with the individual's skin tone. Remember to caution daughter that her hands must be meticulously clean and powder puff fresh and dainty when powder is applied.

When you see little flaky patches on chin and cheeks you may be sure the skin they belong to is the dry type. This skin is usually clear, thin, transparent, not heavy, coarse or dull. It is not an ugly skin. On the contrary it is delicate and lovely. But it shows the tendency toward crowsfeet lines and wrinkles sooner than any other type. The dry skin is today's warning of tomorrow's wrinkles. The wise woman will therefore give herself the proverbial ounce of prevention.

Household Diary Has Real Value

Matters Worthy of Record Can Be Chronicled for Reference.

The day of the diarist as a recorder of events in literary style seems to have passed almost completely. But this does not indicate that diaries are not kept. They may be mere jottings of daily events, to show where the writer was and what were the happenings of the calendar days. Some persons keep diaries in order that they may realize the good times they have, and nothing but pleasant occurrences are recorded in the happy day summaries. Often diaries are kept chiefly for business affairs, the transactions of each day being given without comment; and very briefly. The pages can be referred to, to refresh the writer's memory. These diaries often prove of value in establishing facts in years later.

One of the best diaries for the home is an impersonal household diary. For example, in it are set down such data as when furnace fuel was bought, and when a new supply was necessary, and the total cost of each quantity as well as its price per ton, if coal, or the price in similar units of purchase, if of other fuels. When furniture was bought, if new, is set forth, or when upholstered if the covering was worn out on old chairs, etc. Also what the new material cost, what kind it was, and the charge for the work of recovering the pieces.

Such a household record is a fine thing to have, as, by referring to it, it will be discovered what the upkeep of the furniture amounts to, whether the price paid for the new piece was reasonable or not according to the wear it gives. The worth of the particular upholstery material is also tested by its durability, which can be determined from the pages of the diary.

The record of the garden will prove helpful from year to year, telling, as it will, when plants were set out, or when seed was sown, when bulbs were taken up, whether the place in which they were stored was good or not, according to how the plants developed from them next season. When the lawn was fertilized, and the gardens dug and fertilized in the spring, and the costs, should be set down.

It is by such jottings in few words that this sort of diary proves valuable. The personal element is eliminated, or at least, minimized. The volume is not one for the writer's eyes alone. It is a household diary for anyone to consult who cares to be enlightened on the subjects written about.

Little Change in Holy Land Modes of Living

Housekeeping in the Holy land is still much the same as it was some two thousand years ago. The modern woman of Bethlehem and Nazareth, like her sisters in the Bible, has few shopping worries. One day's visit a year to the nearest shopping center sees all her requirements safely packed on the back of a lumbering camel.

Although communal bakehouses have been established in many villages, numerous housewives still prefer to bake their ring-shaped loaves on hot stones in an outdoor oven.

Their bright-eyed babies are still wrapped in interminable swaddling clothes, which have to be unwound three or four times daily.

All that the poor have for a home is a windowless room with a raised dais at one end on which the family sleep and squat for their frugal meals of bread and goat's milk; the lower quarter serves to accommodate the ox, ass, and any hens that may be theirs.

One incongruity is noticeable in both Judea and Galilee today. Petrol cans are used not only as pitchers by many of the women, who draw water from the famous Virgin's well outside Nazareth, but as cooking utensils and food bins.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are the original little liver pills put up 60 years ago. They regulate liver and bowels.—Adv.

HOBBIES DEAR TO HEARTS OF MEN IN HIGH PLACES

President Roosevelt's hobby for collecting marine pictures is a reminder that other Presidents have had hobbies as well.

President Warren G. Harding collected pipes, as many as he could get, of all sizes and varieties from all parts of the world. Many of these he kept on his broad desk, in what was then the private study of the President on the second floor of the White House. Pipes were placed on book shelves about the room. President Harding smoked one pipe only in his private study, although he had other pipes in the Executive offices which he liked to smoke occasionally. Another collector-President was Calvin Coolidge, who would go to much trouble to get original editions of law books, or autographed copies of more modern ones. He always wrote in the book the date it came into his possession and where he had obtained it.

Another rare book collector was the sixth President of the United States, John Quincy Adams, who gathered rare books from all over the world and particularly treasured those that had been collected by his father.

The late speaker of the house of representatives, Champ Clark, of Missouri, not only had a collection of gavel but of corn-cob pipes as well. Speaker Clark kept these collections in his desk in the speaker's office. It was a mark of rare favor to be shown them and to be told their origin and history.

Andrew Mellon, former secretary of the treasury and former ambassador to Great Britain, has a notable gallery of paintings, many of rare value.

Admiral George Dewey was a collector of watches and was the recipient of many handsome jeweled ones from countries and organizations eager to honor him in this way.

POPCORN THAT POPS!

THESE are crisp, crackling days when the sound of corn popping is a sure sign of the season and pleasant to our ears. But it is not so pleasant if some of the kernels decline to pop, and emit only a dejected fizz. That means that there was too much water in them, and that you will find hard, unpopped kernels or "old maids" in your popper that will have to be sorted out.

That is the reason why you should always get your popcorn in cans. Put up in that fashion, it is first shelled and then dried to the point where it contains exactly enough water to turn into steam, when heated, and promptly turn each kernel inside out with a resounding pop. Having taken this precaution, you can make all sorts of goodies with it to pop into your mouth without fear of hard unpopped kernels, or to hang on your Christmas tree to which the snowy flakes form a most decorative addition.

So here are some recipes guaranteed to be successful if you use the proper kind of popcorn:

Fruit Popcorn Balls

Lemon Popcorn Balls: To make these you will need two and a half quarts of popped corn, or about half the contents of a 10-ounce can. Put the corn in a large pan so there will be plenty of room to stir it while pouring over the syrup. Boil one cup sugar, one-half cup canned light corn syrup and one-half cup water to 260 degrees or a hard ball. Add one teaspoon lemon extract and a few grains of salt, and pour over the corn, mixing well. Butter hands and then form the corn into balls, using as little pressure as possible. This will make about twenty-four medium sized balls.

Honey-Raisin Popcorn Balls: To make these you will need three quarts of popped corn, or three-fourths of the contents of a 10-ounce can. Wash one cup of raisins, and steam them for ten minutes. Combine three-fourths cup canned honey and one and one-fourth cups canned light corn syrup, and boil to 250 degrees, or a medium hard ball. Add one tablespoon butter, one teaspoon vinegar, one-half teaspoon salt and the raisins, pour over the corn and mix well. Butter hands and form into small balls, using as little pressure as possible. This will make about twenty-four medium sized balls.

Molasses Mixtures

Molasses Popcorn Balls: To make these you need three quarts of popped corn, or three-fourths of the contents of a 10-ounce can. Boil one cup canned molasses and one cup canned corn syrup to 250 degrees, or a medium hard ball. Add one tablespoon vinegar, three tablespoons butter and a few grains of salt, and continue boiling to 260 degrees, or a hard ball. Add one-half teaspoon lemon extract, and pour over corn. Butter hands and form into balls, using as little pressure as possible. This makes from sixteen to eighteen medium sized balls.

Popcorn Brittle: To make this you need one and a half quarts of popped corn, or one-third of a 10-ounce can. Boil one cup brown sugar, one-half cup canned molasses and one-fourth cup water to 270 degrees, or a hard ball. Add one-half tablespoon vinegar, one tablespoon butter and one-fourth teaspoon salt. Also add two cups shelled peanuts which have been browned in the oven. Pour over the corn and mix well, then press into small oblong pans about three by five or four by five inches. Press very lightly so as not to break the corn. This makes from six to ten cakes, depending on the size of the pans.

And Here's a Surprise

Popcorn Surprise Balls: Combine two cups sugar, two tablespoons light corn syrup and one cup water in a sauce pan and mix well. Wipe down sides with a wet cloth, and cook without stirring to 240 degrees, or a soft ball. Pour out, without scraping down side of pan, onto a cold, wet slab or platter, and cool to lukewarm. Then beat with spatula, from edges to center, until creamy. Flavor and color this fondant as desired, and then knead with hands until smooth and creamy. Cover with damp cloth for half an hour. Form into balls and roll in popcorn, covering completely. Press corn very lightly into the fondant in order not to break the kernels.
